Thinking Out Loud

By H. M. L.

The status of non-belligerency which Italy occupied as an ally to Germany until last June, is now that of the United States as an ally, not only of Great Britain, but of Greece and China. It is also call- a status of benevolent neutrality toward one or another of the active belligerents. As Chester Rowell puts it, we are at war, but are not participating thus far in the shooting. The Gallup poll, reporting last week, shows that 85 per cent of the people approve this status. How long we can maintain this role of assisting hard pressed democracies without taking part in "the shooting" depends on whether or not Germany, Italy or Japan finds it advantageous to declare war on us. If any one, or all of them, declare war on us, then we have no choice, but to send our men, ships and munitions where they can do the most good for us, and the most damage to the enemy.

At the moment in the fast changing world scene it does not seem probable that any of the axis powers, Germany, Japan or Italy could possibly benefit by declaring war on the United States. In the case of Japan, for instance, the United States, to the shame of its people, is still supplying Japanese war makers with munitions. To declare war against the United States would mean an instant cessation of a trade in war materials and many other commodities, which Japan could not obtain elsewhere without great difficulty. But more important, Japanese shipping would be swept from the seas overnight. We doubt much whether Japan would declare war on us, so long as our biggest fleet is in the Pacific, even though Germany and Italy were to do so.

Italy, which is already extremely uncomfortable in both Albania and Lybia, could gain nothing by adding another fleet to the one which Great Britain is already using so expertly to put Italy out of the war. Moreover, for a great many years the earnings of Italian nationals industriously busy and thrifty in this country has been a large source of income to many Italians at home. Our relations have been extremely friendly with Italy. Our citizens of Italian extraction have helped to maintain that friendly relationship. And in case of defeat, which even Mussolini must contemplate as a possibility, the Italians will look to this country for food to stave off starvation. It seems hardly possible that Italy would find it advantageous to declare war upon us.

What would Germany gain by declaring war on the United States? In the first place she would gain another powerful enemy, whose war muntion activties would be vastly increased by actual war conditions. There is of course, the long view that Germany might take, that if the United States, were an actual partner of Britain in the war, the peace settlement would not be so harsh, as it would be, were the United States to have an actual part in making peace terms. But even this anchor to the windward, for Germany, may, in a short time, be worthless. For already there is a strong tide of sentiment setting in and coming to head in Washington, that whether or not we enter the war, in return for national sacrifices we are making and will make to assist Great Britain to win, we are entitled to sit in at the peace conference when the war ends. If our help is the deciding factor in Great Britain's eventual victory, we can hardly be refused a say-so in the peace terms. If this were accorded us, it would make needless a German declaration of war against the United States, if that were the main reason for it.

However, we have an uneasy feeling sharpened to anxiety by long observation of our own politicians, especially when they are under stress. Suppose that in the Spirit of "77"

As the opening sessions of the Seventy-Seventh Congress of the United States get under way, it is eminently proper that its members and the general public alike have a clear definition in their minds of the problems and responsibilities that the people's representatives face in these troubled world times.

Nor is it hard, by a little thoughtful anaylsis, to list the most important points upon which Congress should fix its unwavering attention. They would certainly include the following:

1. National defense is of primary importance. It is industry's job to provide the materials for this defense; government's task, aided by expert military advice, is to define the country's defense needs and to employ them most effectively to safeguard our shores.

2. The rearmament program should be carried through with as little dislocation as possible of our regular peacetime economy.

3. No group in this country need lose any of the sound social gains that have been won over the course of the years. But the Congress does have a schedule of modification and clarification that it could well face this session in the interest of making our economy function more soundly and for the good of Americans. It has avoided decision so far on amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, so badly in need of repair; now the report of the Smith House Committee studying that Act and the Board administering it points once again to the necessity for changes. The principles behind the Walter-Logan Bill, which narrowly failed to become law this last session, are worthy ones; in some form, they are deserving of more Congressional thought. Measures following the pattern of these projected items of legislation virtually demand the consideration of the new Congress.

Essentially, the Seventy-Seventh Congress has this touchstone to test all its acts: Consider the safety of the United States, and promote inteernal harmony so that our industries and our whole national life will be strong. If it works in that spirit, it can make "77" a real lucky number for our great nation and all the people who dwell here in peace and in freedom.——Contributed.

"Home Is The Writer . . ."

For a number of years in the more recent history of this republic, disillusioned by the aftermath of the World War and further dismayed by the impact of depression, many of our leading writers toyed with left-wing ideas that had their origin in the darkest corners of foreign lands. Then things began happening abroad that put a different color on these foreign isms, no matter how attractively they were packaged. And our really sensible authors beat a fast retreat and began to realize anew the virtues of our American system. They suddenly saw that this side of the Atlantic harbored by far the best and happiest life for the individual. In other words, to paraphrase Stevenson's verse, "Home is the writer, home from the sea."

Eloquent testimony of this new appreciation of our own land is found in the following words from one noted playwright. which scarcely need further comment:

"What of our own country? Ours is a vast, sprawling young nation, composed of men and women of all conceivable racial origins and all conceivable occupations and habits and points of view. We are by nature easy-going, haphazard, undisciplined and ornery. And yet—the building of America has been the most tremendously success mass achievement in all human history.

If efficiency is the same as effectiveness, then we are by far the most efficient people on earth.

"When you hear that Mussolini has made the trains run on time, or that Hitler has built a system of military roads all the way from France to Poland, just give a thought to Panama Canal and Boulder Dam and the Imperial Valley in California and the Lincoln Highway and our free school system —and also to that magnificent and enduring structure, the Constitution of the United States.

"We are not going to abandon this system of life until we find a better one—and no better system has yet been devised by man or beast."—Contributed.

JUST WONDERIN'

I wonder at prominent people
Who figure each day in the news—
Their thoughts and their words and their actions
Fill all of our special reviews.
Bright spot lights are turned on their faces,
We're told how they walk, eat and dress,
But some of this stuff is poor reading,
As even themselves must confess.

I wonder how many important personages whose names figured prominently in the headlines of 1940, will have a part, possibly all of their importance by the close of 1941.

There is for instance, the man with out-thrust jaw and high heeled boots, can it be that we shall soon hear his requiem sung by two wailing partners, in these poignant lines—

"Sister you were mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze?"

Of course we heard this person shout, "when I start I never turn back," but he forgot to tell us in what direction he would be facing when he started and that the intrepid Greeks would be fast upon his heels.

Anyway, if I were he, I wouldn't sit under a bust of Caesar and I would be seriously considering the Ides of March.

Something—something significant happened to another powerful apostle of destruction as the old year was drawing to a close. A force greater than he can ever hope to muster, whispered the word, "refrain," and he obeyed. He dared not affront the Yulteide spirit; he dared not blast the traditional joy and good will with which the children of man are wont to hail the coming of each New Year. That he was halted in his mad career of wanton terror, even though for but a few hours. proves that he is not invincible and strengthens our hope that ere long, he will head and heed the commanding words, "thus far and no further shalt thou go."

I wonder if Senator Wheeler is by far the most optimistic optimist the world has ever produced. He seems to believe that Hitler will sit down to negotiate a peace pact which involves the restoration by him of conquered territory, ill gotten gains and justice to those hapless people whom he has enslaved. I sympathize with the senator's desire for the return of law and order to a war mad world; but I do hope he will keep his powder dry.

I wonder about the inscrutable "bear that walks like a man" and about Japan, the nation that worked so long to win a respected place in the sun and then sank to the position of chestnut clawer for the gangsters of Europe. There never were so many things to wonder about before in all of earth's history and there never were so many people wondering about them. It is a time for straight thinking, in which we should barbor no delusions. Europe is a tough neighborhood and we are not for removed from its bad, bad men. But this is the Home of the Brave and it shall always remain the Land of the Free.

Uncle Silas says: "I don't aim to read the Bible from cover to cover. But considering our rain storms, I'd like to read up on the one that lasted forty days and forty nights."

next few months, Germany finds all the cards stacked against her. Suppose Japan makes further retreats in China and no offsetting attack on the Dutch East Indies, and suppose Italy is rendered hors de combat. On top of these circumstances, suppose German, Italian and Japanese peoples began really to hunger; if in Germany materials for various erztaz foods became scarce, fish sausage prices soared, cats and dogs became gun shy, and horses lacking fodder, afforded little sustenance. Then supposing that Italian macaroni and other paste foods vanished because wheat was unobtainable, and the Japanese found life no longer be sustained on seaweed.

About that time the leaders of these various nations, who are nothing but aggrandized politicians, would look for an "out". The "out" would be to declare war on the United States and shortly thereafter throw up the sponge, because outnumbered and outgunned by two great "plutocratic" nations, one of which owned all the gold in the world, and the other owned half the world's resources. That might "save the faces" of Messrs. Hitler and Mussolini, and of the blood-thirsty pint-sized miltiary oligarchs who rule Japan. In such case they would have been beaten by far superior forces, and, with expressive gestures and shrugs, they would ask their people to forgive them. And whether forgiveness was granted or not, we would have been active participants in another world war and nothing much to show for it, unless, indeed, we were smart enough andi forceful enough to secure the kind of a peace that would make wars and dictators impossible.

Switch to Electric Cooking & Water Heating

Rates are DOWN ...Cost is LOW!

Repeated cuts in electric rates—five reductions since 1928—have made electricity cheap in California. Ordinary electric services in the home, such as lights and appliances, cost about half as much today as they did in 1928. Now, under recently announced rate cuts, you can buy electricity for only one cent per kilowatt hour, after you have used 200 kilowatt hours. Your additional use of an electric range and water heater should earn you this low rate.

Look at the superior advantages of the electric range. There is speed. The ovens and surface units of the 1941 electric ranges are five times faster today than a few years ago. There is cleanliness. There is accurate temperature control. There is safe and dependable cooking by an automatic clock. Compare the electric range point for point, feature for feature—then choose.

Trade in your old stove and water heater. Take advantage of the liberal trade-in allowances now being made. Remember the truly modern range is the electric range.

SPORTS

N. C. HOOPSTERS LOSE TO STRONG GRANT HIGH FIVE

Undauted by setbacks administered Friday evening by the Grant Union High School Pacers, the Nevada City Yellowjackets basketball squads are preparing for important battles with the Grass Valley Miners in Grass Valley Friday night.

Both the Grant Union game and the coming Grass Valley contest are in the Sierra Foothill League.

Grant Union Strong

The Yellowjackets were no match for the strong Grant Union squads. The local B team lost by a score of 29 to 12 and the Nevada City unlimited five dropped a 40 to 16 decision to the Placers.

Coach Ed Frantz hopes for a good showing against the Miners Friday night. In the Grant game he was hampered by the lack of substitutes but it is believed the squad will be at full strength for the Grass Valley game.

YOUTH TRAINING DISCUSSED AT FOREST OFFICE

Clifford H. George, of Marysville, director of the National Youth Administration for this northern California area, met with Supervisor Guerdon Ellis of the Tahoe National Forest last week to discuss future work and training for local youths on the approved forest service youth projects.

Ellis announces that there are still positions available in the forest service for any young persons between the ages of 18 and 22 who can gain valuable experience and background which will aid them in future employment in private industry. Training is offered in PBX switchboard operation and receptionists, office routine, stenography, accounting and engineering drafting.

Money and Training

The work consists of sixty scheduled hours per month and is done under the careful and expert supervision of members of the forest service staff. The applicant receives in addition to this training the sum of $18 per month.

The only qualifications necessary are that the individual must be desirous of learning and bettering themselves for future full time employment. Director George has announced that interested youths should apply at once to the Tahoe forest service headquarters and consult with Chief Clerk Everhart for interviews and assignments.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS MADE BY CHURCHMAN

(By Elizabeth Cherry Pateman)

Eight million children of American families go to the movies every week. There they are subjected to the most potent educational influence mankind has ever devised. Because of this fact the Reverend Jas K. Frederick, a young Episcopal minister, has started a firm in Hollywood in recent years known as The Cathedral Films Corporation. Recently this corporation produced a full-length feature picture, "The Great Commandment." But for the most part, Cathedral Films produces teaching shorts on religious subjects. Among their most recent productions is "The Nobleman's Son."

Frederick, who directs Cathedral Films and distributes the teaching shorts to the thousands of churches in the United States who have projectors and screens in their social halls, made it a business to study the are of movie making during the seven years he was in college and seminary. His aim always was to make excellent films presenting subjects that are desirable for young minds, and thus to supply an influence that would be constructive.

Judge Grants Mrs. Luthena Lashbaugh Divorce In S. F.

Superior Judge Sylvian J. Lazarus in San Francisco settled the divorce case of Mrs. Luthena Lashbaugh in a manner that many court room spectators to opine she talked herself into a half interest in her husband's mining property but talked herself out of alimony.

On her complaint of cruelty, Mrs. Lashbaugh was granted a divorce from John Hampton Lashbaugh of Nevada City and also was awarded a community property share in five mining claims whose value has been estimated from all the way up to $500,000.

Mrs. Lashbaugh asserted her husband seldom worked and that she had to support him and his mother by working as a waitress. In regard to the mining claims, she told the court she had staked out the property and erected the monuments.

Receives No Alimony

In settling the question of alimony Judge Lazarus took her story into consideration and remarked:

"Why should a woman who has testified she supported her husband for nine years now claim alimony when she is relieved from supporting him any more?"

Lashbaugh was ordered by the court, however, to pay for the cost of the divorce action.

At stake in the divorce proceedings was the question of a half interest in five mining slaims in Seerra County. Without delving into who staked out the claims, the court decided Ms. Lashbaugh was entitled to a half share as her communiry property interest.

Cross-Complaint Denied

Lashbaugh had filed a cross complaint for divorce which was denied by the court.

The judge declared the husband's most serious charge was Mrs. Lashbaugh might have committted adultry. The judge added:

"Now I don't need a motion picture reproduction to prove such conduct to me, but in this case there is an entire lack of proof of any improper conduct by the wife."

PREPARING ANSWER

District Attorney Vernon Stoll is preparing an answer to the writ in behalf of County Clerk McCormack. The answer will maintain the boundaries set forth in the petition of the Truckee residents will not close and therefore the petition could not under the law be certified.
